

Osteopathic Approaches to Treating Illness in Children

– Daniel Stuttard

Come and explore the application of osteopathic principles to the unwell child. Infection and illness are a significant challenge to the health of the growing child. Holistic management of the inert natural resources of the unwell child allow the osteopath and parents, in conjunction with appropriate suitable healthcare guidance, to direct the self healing mechanisms of the maturing body to lead the child to wellness. But how can hands-on non-invasive technique help? Osteopathic approaches to optimising, enhancing and augmenting the vitality and potency of the maturing child will be discussed and explained with a demonstration of hands on application of techniques and treatment. The talk/demo will focus on working with the maturing immune system - how can 'hands-on techniques' influence and assist the immune system of the developing child.
